Dissertation

Abstract: Tremendous advances in the field of vocal pedagogy have given the profession an opportunity to approach teaching voice in a different way. It is time to recognize that students can be taught multiple styles healthily, enabling them to become more flexible and marketable performers. The key is the functionality and flexibility obtained with the proper techniques of cross-training.

Chair: Professor E. Jacob Will

Committee Members: Dr. J. Daniel Jenkins, Dr. Lynn Kompass and Professor Janet Hopkins
